"The steps to a good life can be simple, easy, and affordable."

The Three Pillars:

- Peace ~ the inner state (Meditation · mindfulness · spirituality/meaning-making · gratitude & affirmations · values work)
- Stability ~ physical foundation (Exercise · self-care · diet/nutrition · sleep · connection)
- Expression ~ the outer life (Travel · creation/art/music · sport · passion projects · hobbies) ← The domain most competitors neglect entirely

The Modifiers (cross-cutting principles, not separate content categories):

- Spontaneity ~ periodic novelty/wildcard recommendations; breaking routine on purpose, not just optimizing toward preference
- Realism ~ recommendations are things people will actually do, not aspirational filler
- No-shame consistency ~ no guilt mechanics, no streak-loss anxiety, no red badges of failure
- Life-context adaptation ~ recommendations flex around what's actually happening in someone's life (a hard week, travel, grief), not a fixed routine
- Referral pathways ~ direct, no-friction referral to medication/prescriber and talk therapy. A trust signal: the app knows what it isn't.

The Throughline: Memory

- The chatbot is the connective tissue across the whole app. The screener, chats, journal entries, and tracked behavior all feed one continuously-referenced living profile. The app should feel like it remembers and builds on everything, not like four disconnected tools.

About / Why We Made This:

- People already turn to general-purpose AI chatbots as therapists without clinical grounding, privacy guarantees, or crisis protocols. At the same time, real support is split between two extremes: expensive, hard-to-access therapy, and a flood of generic, low-quality self-help content that asks too much and delivers too little. ANCHOR exists in the middle: a daily practice for self-knowledge, built on the belief that the steps to a good life can be simple, easy, and affordable.

Grounded In

- Acceptance and Commitment Therapy (ACT) ~ values-based action and psychological flexibility, woven through the Peace pillar and the Goals page
- The Big Five (OCEAN) personality model ~ the empirically-respected framework behind the Week One personality sense-making, presented in warm, narrative language rather than raw scores
- Positive psychology ~ the broader research lineage that Peace, Stability, and Expression echo, without being a literal copy of any single framework
- Cognitive Behavioral Therapy (CBT) ~ the most widely used clinical model

Target Positioning & Distribution

- Primary focus: Campus-based student wellness intervention via university partnerships; distribution through student government advocacy and institutional grant funding
- Value proposition: Equity-driven access to mental health support for high-stress urban student populations at low/no cost compared to private therapy alternatives
- Source material: Curated personal activity lists + verified activity library; limit real-time web search to trusted domains to manage accuracy risk. Content library is currently being developed in the Phase 1 Anchor MVP
- Memory system: Core technical challenge; balance continuous personalization with end-to-end encryption constraints (client-side models, differential privacy, or hybrid sync approaches require prior resolution before full engineering)

Path:

- Phase 0: Curation and idea development
- Phase 1: Site launch and library expansion
- Phase 2: Incorporate personalization & accounts into site
- Phase 3: Site finalized
- Phase 4: Develop the app
